

Contingent Bequest Language

Sometimes situations change after a will is drafted—the people and charities named in our will may not be there in the future. In such cases, naming Loudoun Education Foundation as a contingent beneficiary can be a great alternative:

If (insert name) is not living at the time of my demise (or if Name of Charity is no longer in existence), I give, devise and bequeath (a percentage of the estate, specific dollar amount, remainder of estate after all other bequests & expenses, etc.) to Loudoun Education Foundation or its successor in interest, a charitable foundation supporting the mission of enhancing educational excellence in Loudoun County Public Schools, located in Ashburn, VA, TIN: [INSERT], to be used for its general support and charitable purposes without restriction (or you may use the restricted bequest language above to define a specific purpose for your charitable bequest).
